

It's hard to believe 10 years have passed since the world-altering day the Twin Towers fell and America fell to its knees with them.

It has been eight or nine years since retired Lexington Division of Police Chaplain John Welsh last opened his box of mementos he brought home from his service at Ground Zero. Yet, as we approach the 10-year anniversary of Sept. 11, 2001, Welsh recently allowed us to go through some of his memories with him, remembering those Americans who were lost in the horrific tragedy.

Nestled in his box were a gas mask, gloves, countless photos and his Port Authority identification card, still strung on the lanyard he wore during his service there following the terrorist attacks. >>
